Groupwork is a peer reviewed journal covering all aspects of social groupwork in any professional field.

The Editors undertake to ensure that:

1. papers offered for publication are reviewed anonymously by persons professionally competent to do so;

2. reviewers are aware of the need to be objective in their approach, to declare any personal interests which might introduce an element of bias into their assessment, and to decline to review if any interest would make it impossible to be objective;

3. the decision to accept or reject a submission is taken objectively on the basis of the reviews received;

4. all authors are given a chance to clear the proofs of the final version of the paper prior to giving their final agreement to publication.

Authors for their part confirm that:

1. the work is their own original work;

2. any use of the work of others is acknowledged, and that where necessary proper consent has been obtained;

3. all those who have contributed to the article are named as co-authors;

4. any funding or sponsorship is declared;

5. any other matters which might cause bias - or might give the impression of bias - are declared.

In the event that an author is unclear about any of the above, they should raise the matter with the Editor in advance of publication.

Further guidance on publications ethics may be obtained from the Editor or Publishers. Authors may also refer to the website of the Committee on Publications Ethics (publicationethics.org).
